

New album from Norwegian supergroup Chrome Hill out on April 5th

The members of Chrome Hill have toured in 30 countries on four continents and now their first album in five years is finally ready. Country Of Lost Borders will be released on vinyl and CD on April 5th.

- I'm fascinated by barren, abandoned and open landscapes. They're not necessarily pretty, but for some reason they really speak to me.

Says Norwegian supergroup Chrome Hill's songwriter and baritone guitarist Asbjørn Lerheim. The other band members are Jørgen Munkeby (Shining), Roger Arntzen (In The Country, Ballrogg) and Torstein Lofthus (Shining, Elephant 9).

On Country Of Lost Borders, the band's fourth album, they combine influences from jazz, blues and americana with a warm vintage rock sound, and the result is a stunning 40-minute album.

Top notch desert rock

Chrome Hill received international critical acclaim for their third album Earthlings, released in 2008. But with band members touring thirty countries on four continents, Chrome Hill had to take their time with this fourth album. Time well spent, as Lerheim explains:

- I've spent a lot of time writing music and selecting songs for this album. And on our band rehearsals we've all worked on the arrangements together, often going several rounds with a single tune. So by the time we hit the studio, we needed just two days to record it. We wanted to let the music mature, and we're really happy about the result.

The release concert for Chrome Hill Country Of Lost Borders at The Crossroad Club in Oslo on April 4th. Chrome Hill will also play a mini concert at Oslo record shop Big Dipper April on 6th.
